recently. There was a larger proportion from the trading that has prevailed of transactions in flats and fewer in high price realty.

The active demand for realty has ever since the recovery from the panic been confined to expensive holdings. For a couple of years there has been very little. building of fiats and tenements, and not a few good judges are inclined to believe that the supply of such housing is pretty well taken up.

If the cheaper grades of multifamily houses are once more bringing good returns some shifting of dealing from high price realty would of course be expected. Possibly yesterday's broker age budget points in that direction.
